

NACS Category Definitions and Numbering Guide – Version 6.1

The NACS Research & Technology Board Committee has reviewed existing practices with regard to the organization of sales and purchase information by merchandise category within the convenience store industry. This effort has been published in the form of mainline category & sub-category definitions including descriptions. These categories can then be used by the industry to establish performance benchmarks and to establish a framework for retailers and manufacturers to have meaningful discussions regarding market performance comparisons.

To fully realize the benefit of the standardized Category Definitions, a consistent numbering scheme is necessary. Utilization of a standardized numbering scheme will:

1. Provide a common language for discussions between business partners, even if the partners are currently not utilizing EB2B initiatives;
2. Assist in the deployment of NACS EB2B initiatives and improve upon their functionality;
3. Facilitate the automation of data transfers between business partners, including retailer-to-supplier communication, regardless of the status of EB2B deployment within the industry; and
4. Improve accuracy and speed of reporting by NACS of industry performance measures.

Without a standardized scheme to number the category definitions, a continual “mapping” of category definitions from individual company numbering systems to their business partners and NACS for reporting purposes will be required. This mapping causes additional delays, additional costs, and inaccuracies in communication of category information within the industry.

A standardized scheme avoids these issues.

Existing System Implementation Guide

NACS recognizes that many companies have implemented price management systems to control purchases, set authorized items & vendors, establish retail prices, and drive store-level scanning systems. To implement these systems, retailers have already organized and defined category numbering schemes for their internal use. Converting to a new “NACS scheme” is costly in terms of time and confusion within the company, as well as in hard dollars.

However, it is unlikely that conversion of existing systems will be required. Instead, NACS suggests that retailers consider adding a “NACS Category Cross-Reference” field to each record within their item files. This field will allow reporting systems to sort and consolidate information using the NACS Category Definitions while, at the same time, retaining their existing reporting and identification systems. Using this technique, there will not be changes to the operation of existing systems deployed by retailers.

New System Implementation Guide

As retailers migrate to newer price management systems or implement these systems for the first time, it is suggested that they consider using the NACS’ numbering scheme as their “native” coding scheme within their new systems. Certainly this is not required, as retailers could easily utilize their own scheme and retain a cross-reference field as described in the “Existing System Implementation” section.

Category Definition & Numbering Scheme

The NACS Standard Category Numbering Scheme is a six position numeric field organized into three groups of two digits. For readability purposes, the scheme can be displayed and printed as “99-99-99.” The first two digits represent the major category identifier. The second two digits represent the sub-category identifier. The final two digits represent a “fine-line” category identifier.

Under this scheme, the “Wine” Category becomes coded as “05-00-00.” Under the Wine Category are sub-categories for various segments of the wine business, so Table/Varietal Wine is coded as “05-01-00.”

This scheme easily accommodates the existing category definitions and provides ample room for future growth.

At this time, the “fine-line” category definitions have not been identified except for Foodservice. Retailers are discouraged from using these digits.

Treatment of Supply Items Within Pricebook Applications

Supply items are not considered to be “merchandise” items from a category management perspective and, therefore, are not included within the NACS Category Definitions. However, implementation of an automated price management system will require the specification of supply items to be purchased for store use. Under the NACS Category Numbering Scheme, Supply items are coded using a top-level number of 99-00-00. Any further break out of “sub-category” definition is left to the retailers’ discretion and is not required by this suggested implementation.

New for Version 6.1 –The NACS Category Definitions and Numbering Guide

Changes from Version 6.0 to Version 6.1 include: Health & Beauty Care. Changes from Version 6.0 are indicated in italics.

Note: In the numbering scheme, NACS reserves the use of numbers 1–80.
